

Mary Corrigan has fifteen years of entrepreneurial experience as a facilitator, educator, and coach specializing in team development, thriving through change, and unleashing creativity. Incurably curious, she is a convener of inclusive conversations and a certified teacher of the Creativity in Business program pioneered at the Stanford School of Business. She also has a degree in Finance.

Mary's experience includes a rich tapestry of organizational change work in corporate, governmental and not for profit sectors and at all levels of organizations, both nationally and internationally.

Career highlights include:

- Graphic facilitator and co-designer of multi year, whole system culture change and corporate social responsibility initiatives for Unocal in the US and Southeast Asia
- Leadership team development through visual story telling for sales and training organizations at Genentech
- Strategic planning with Women for Women International in Rwanda
- Teaching and coaching hundreds of teachers and administrators to use drawing to increase student achievement in the public school system
- Teaching the Creativity in Business program to support low income entrepreneurs create breakthrough results in their businesses for the Women's Initiative for Self Employment
- Convening international women's circles in the U.S., Ireland and the United Kingdom.

Clients include: The National Forest Service, Genentech, The Ball Foundation, Kaiser Permanente, Women for Women International, Providence Healthcare, Intel, City of Oakland, and Atlantic Philanthropies.

In addition to her organizational work, Mary writes a weekly blog at www.creativity4us.com. She coaches individuals in transition, leads private retreats and teaches workshops in personal and professional development, including: Creativity for the Rest of Us, Quick Draw – if you can hold a pen you can draw, and Life by Design.

To learn more and see a comprehensive client list visit www.TrackingTheWisdom.com